

Participation Counts ✓

A Look at Participation-Based Safety and the Trends Affecting Your Safety Culture

A recent survey in a report entitled Participation Counts: A Look at Participation-Based Safety highlights how safety leaders across a multitude of industries are encouraging employees to actively participate in workplace safety.

The results provide insight into an emerging approach to EHS management, participation-based safety.

98%

Report a positive correlation between higher worker participation and safety performance enhancements

72%

Believe management visibility into safety performance is "extremely important"

But only 30% said that management has "complete visibility" into safety performance at their companies

55%

Believe that participation-based safety is more effective than behavior-based safety

15% think that behavior-based programs have a negative impact on safety culture

19%

Describe the current level of safety participation as "limited"

35% say lack of management involvement is the biggest barrier to increasing worker participation in safety

Join the movement and learn how to use participation-based safety to build a positive safety culture

Strengthen safety compliance and engagement, reduce risk for accidents and injury, and avoid costly OSHA fines and litigation

SAFETY CULTURE 2018

Motivators, Messaging & Management for World-Class Safety Performance

An EHS Daily Advisor Event

September 12-14, 2018 | Atlanta, GA

Attendees of Safety Culture 2018 will learn strategies for:

- Supercharging your safety committees for maximum safety engagement and retention
- Dealing with difficult employees and training them to make safety a priority
- Measuring safety performance with analytics and hazard tracking
- Evaluating and fine-tuning incentives & disciplinary systems to ensure maximum effectiveness
- Identifying and eliminating cultural hazards
- Improving your safety training to ensure its engaging and accessible for all employees
- And more!

Save My Seat!